

a short introduction to temple bright

We promise commercially relevant advice direct from a partner. We achieve this through a groundbreaking business model with economies derived from technology.

We are a chambers practice: a team of senior solicitors with a background in leading commercial firms. Our offices are in London EC2 and Bristol. Having developed an efficient structure in which experienced lawyers advise in person, we can offer a higher level of service with greater creativity and value than traditional firms.

Timeline

Temple Bright was established in Bristol by two founders in March 2010. Not long after our second birthday, we had grown to fifteen partners. In October 2012 we won Regional Law Firm of the Year, beating a number of larger and more established firms. On our third birthday in March 2013, we opened our London office in Tech City.

We now have a substantial UK and international client base, ranging from startups to PLCs. We have developed this practice by adopting a distinctive style of advising and a unique firm model, aimed at clients who are seeking an alternative to the traditional solicitors' approach.

Four promises to clients

We started with a blank sheet to answer the question "What do clients like least about using lawyers?"

Poor quality advice, high and open-ended fees, delegation to juniors and inaccessible partners are common complaints as solicitors' firms have grown.

We therefore set out the four promises to clients which are found on our website:

- We provide City quality advice to growing businesses.
- Our fees are reasonable with no surprises.
- We promise attention from your regular senior lawyer.
- We are accessible and responsive.

We have been able to keep these promises through the use of cost saving technology and a fresh business model, which we see as vital to keeping our clients happy as our own business grows.

The “chambers practice” model

We recruit only senior lawyers, typically recognised as leaders in their field by the professional directories. Each partner has autonomy over their practice. The firm does not rely on junior lawyers charging at high rates to inflate partner profits. Our structure derives its name from the barristers’ chambers and ensures that experienced lawyers work on all aspects of our clients’ affairs.

However, amidst such innovation the chambers practice retains certain positive features of the traditional law firm model. In particular, our lawyers share clients and work from our offices in teams, bringing the multi-disciplinary expertise required for many transactions. We have fostered a collegiate firm culture with high standards and a distinctive way of working.
